Proper Preparation Prevents Poor Performance

Doing your research and planning gives you a head start and is the best chance of knowing the answer to the tricky questions by the interviewer. Always have in mind that a job interview gives you the chance to share your story and show your dedication to the specific role and organization.

Be always sure, you know your CV inside out. Read the job description and be ready to answer questions based on the given data. Write down some questions you think will be asked, and then work on your answers for those questions, so you can answer with confidence. At last, be prepared with relevant questions about the role and the company to ask the interviewer.

Interview method

Will it be a telephonic interview, conference or in person? Telephonic Interviews or VC should be looked onto just as seriously as the interviews in person, also your preparation for the interview should be equally good.

If the interview is in person, be sure to wear appropriate attire. If it's an interview for a good role in a company, formal attire will be the best. It's always good to be overdressed than underdressed, and if you're given a call for a second round interview, you should have a good understanding of how employees at that company dress.

While meeting your interviewer, always make eye contact and give a good handshake. The first impression that you give and also your appearance will be judged by the interviewer which plays a key role in deciding the right candidate for the job.

Say Yes to Tricky questions..

The market is highly competing and companies need to find the most suitable candidates for the job. Tricky questions that are asked during the interviews might not surely have right or wrong answers. These questions are made up to test how candidates react when they are given a situation.

Your answer demonstrates your thinking skills and proves how you make decisions in a very short time. The Interviewers also have an eye on the process in which you collect the information you need to make the best decisions. Tricky questions like 'How many baseballs are there in France?' have become quite common with interviews these years. It's a chance to show how logical you are and how you tackle problems, so keep yourself cool.

What is your biggest weakness?

Give your answer so that it gives a positive angle. Focus on a quality that you are improving on. For ex, if you spend much time on understanding the details, remember a scenario where you took the time to get back and think about the bigger picture and the following advantages.

If this is your first job after graduation, then it is a good chance to share about how you managed issues when studying. The Employers like to see that applicants can identify their shortcomings and are striving to correct them.

Where do you see yourself in the future?

Information of your employer can help you simply answer this question, which provides you the chance to show your passion for the specific role and your ability to share fresh ideas. Prepare a good answer that shows your experience and expertise. Always keep in mind that the employer is focused on your long-term career goal.

Why are you the perfect person for this job? Or Why should we hire you for this job?

Specially, when you are being asked to match your strengths to the abilities needed to successfully fulfill the position. Employers want to see that you know the company's business goals, that your special skill set can have a great impact, and that you are perfectly suited for the job.

Wrap-up

If you're an experienced applicant, It is possible that you have heard some of the above questions earlier in interviews, but if you're still qualifying, the most important task to do is planning out your answers to the above questions.

In the case of technical questions, your planning for your exams should indicate that you have a very good knowledge for an interview, but we'd also suggest revising the areas of the certifications you've pursued that are most important to the job you're applying for.
